It only takes a dollar to cure a sick baby. When pretty Vesta Tilley heard this yesterday, she put her hand in her vest pocket, pulled out a bill, and said; "I'll pay for five cures. I sail to-morrow, and I want to do something to bring me luck."

Miss Tilley believes in luck, and is willing to pay for it. She didn't know that there were any people in America too poor to buy medicines and food for their sick children, until "The Evening World" Fund was opened. It may astonish her to be told that the free doctors made 21,478 visits last month, found 1,422 sick children, many of whom were so very, very poor that the physicians had to fill their own prescriptions.

needs a few clothes, a few pounds of food and a roof that doesn't leak to be comfortable, and with health and a little philosophy thrown in to be happy. But if he lacks health, if his body is pain-racked, he can enjoy nothing. And that is the condition of the pensioners of the Sick Hables' Fund.

When the doctors call at the wretched homes along the rivers' edges and ask if they is anything they can do, the inevitable reply of the mother is:
"Only get my child well."

With good health the possibilities of man are all but limitiess, One of the staff doctors hits the nail squarely on the head when he writes to the Chief of Corps:

"There has never, I venture to say, been a year in the history of the Fund when the children needed looking after as they do this year. The reason is plain enough. Every one knows what a hard Winter the past has been for the poor. The men have been out of work. Credit is hard to get; the pawnbrokers will lend nothing on furniture and clothes, and the results show on the children, as a case I had uptown Saturday will illustrate. I found a child with folicular-tonsilitis, but very much sicker than she would usually be. On inquiry it came out that owing to lack of work the children had been on short commons for some time, and the mother, the patient and the other child were debilitated and anaemic in consequence. The results is that the poor little ones were not in even their usual state to resist sickness, and if we would save the children now is the time. And we must work sharply to do it."

Just send any change you can spare to the cashier of "The World" and the Sick Bables' Fund will put it to he best possible use.
